The Archaeological Leather Group (ALG)

promotes the study of leather and skin-based material in archaeological and other historical contexts.

We have an international membership including archaeologists, academics, conservators, museum curators, leatherworkers and specialist reconstructors, with the ALG providing a platform for sharing knowledge and furthering research both scholarly and practical.

The Group organises regular events such as webinars, conferences, and visits, and publishes a biannual newsletter for its members covering the latest research and activities within the field of leather heritage. The ALG website is a great resource for publications, with an excellent bibliography of academic books and papers relating to leather and skin materials. Previous newsletters and videos of talks to the group can also be accessed in the members section of the website.

New members are always welcome at any stage of their career. Our annual UK membership subscription is £10, non-UK £12.
